

David HIRCOCK

Estee Lauder

Professor David Hircock works internationally in areas of fair and equitable trade and conservation, specializing in supply chain of natural resources. He works with Indigenous peoples and farmers around the world highlighting human rights issues, including land tenure and access to natural resources. Often the result of this work culminates in developing equitable business partnerships with Indigenous peoples and farmers where the supply chain positively impacts community development, mitigates climate change, and protects and enhances biodiversity.

Abstract

“Evaluating the impact of actions taken: What are the criteria to be used?”

“Natural ingredients supply chains – a rights-based approach”

Professor Hircock will overview supply chains which are based on an Indigenous, intellectual, human rights perspective related to his work with Indigenous peoples throughout the world, focusing on new “rights-based approaches.”
